Chapter 18: Life Inside

(Excerpt)

...The layout of one consult room makes me uneasy. While the door is always open, the centre's prison officer is outside, many metres away. Neither myself, nor the inmate is visible. It is also the noisiest clinic that I have encountered. Loud radio pop music echoes constantly off hard surfaces. A cry for help is unlikely to be heeded. One inmate attends with a strong idea of exactly what he wants and is unable to accept that his request cannot be actioned immediately. Rapidly, he becomes abusive, with his anger directed at me. As he leans forward in his chair, enraged green eyes flashing, his threatening demeanour escalates...
